Contemporary Music Centre

The Contemporary Music Centre is the information centre for contemporary music from the island of Ireland. We document, develop and promote contemporary music from the island of Ireland. Our library and sound archive houses the scores, recordings and related materials of approximately two hundred composers at our base in Dublin and online at www.cmc.ie.

We aim to create and facilitate opportunities for composers and performers in the performance of contemporary music and to develop an audience for and participation in contemporary music in Ireland and for Irish contemporary music abroad. CMC provides scores and related materials from our collection to order for performance and perusal along with information, advice and consultancy relating to new music in Ireland. We also provide repertoire advice and suggestions for performers and ensembles, programmers and festivals. CMC develops and manages an ongoing programme of free live events in order to promote the work of Irish composers and contemporary music, and engage with different audiences. As well as serving the new music community on the island of Ireland, CMC also exists as an international organisation aimed at promoting and developing opportunities for Irish composers abroad.

A member of the International Association of Music Information Centres, CMC works internationally on a number of different levels and collaborates on many ongoing international projects. CMC was the lead Irish partner in the two year project New Music: New Audiences from 2012-2014 along with music organisations and ensembles from 17 European countries. We also produce an annual showcase CD new music::new Ireland available when you come to visit us at stand 17 (the IAMIC stand). The Contemporary Music Centre is funded by the Arts Council /An Chomhairle Ealaion and the Arts Council of Northern Ireland. CMC recognises the support of Culture Ireland for international promotional activity.

Music From Ireland is the Irish Music Export Initiative. It was established by First Music Contact in 2004 and is funded by Culture Ireland. Association of Irish Composers

The AIC is the representative body of composers in Ireland (including Northern Ireland). AIC represents the interests of composers, and seeks to enhance the professional status of its members through promotional activities. It is the Irish section of the International Society for Contemporary Music (ISCM) and is the Irish member of the European Composers’ Forum (ECF).

AIC’s activities work on three levels: local, national and international. We seek to broaden the awareness of new music by Irish composers on each of these levels through partnership with organisations such as the Contemporary Music Centre (CMC), the other national members of the ISCM network, and venues, presenters and press both within Ireland and abroad. As part of its promotional activities, the AIC runs a number of concert programmes, both national and international, including composer curated concerts, international exchanges, and a new series of talks.

We also run an online multimedia Journal in which composers, musicologists and performers discuss and analyse contemporary music. Recent international concerts and performances include the ISCM World Music Days Festival 2016 (Tongyeong, South Korea), which included a premiere of Irish composer Nick Roth’s Woodland Heights, Irish Music in Korea concert, (March 2016, Seoul, South Korea) with performances by Nick Roth and Irish composer Anna Murray of composed and improvised music for saxophone and electronics.

Cassiopeia Winds is an Irish chamber wind ensemble formed in 2010, whose performances are marked by vivacity, panache and a dedication to the exploration of fine soundworlds. Though the ensemble has the capacity to expand or contract to suit its innovative programming, at its core is a quintet of players whose members are among the finest in the country, including players from the National Symphony Orchestra of Ireland, RTÉ Concert Orchestra and Crash Ensemble.

The ensemble aims with each performance to run the full and varied gamut of the wind repertoire from 19th century to contemporary works, including Danzi, Reicha, Barber, Hindemith, Poulenc, Francaix, Ibert, Nielsen, Ligeti and Arvo Part. They have a dedication to bringing the lesser known works of this repertoire into the Irish and international concert halls and festivals. The ensemble also has a great interest in contemporary music and in supporting the work of new Irish composers, and intend to commission new works for wind quintet for performance in Ireland and internationally.

They gave the first performance of a new work by Sean O’Callaghan in 2014 and have commissioned a new work from John Buckley which received its premiere in October 2015 followed by five performances on tour around Ireland that autumn/winter. Cassiopeia Winds have a passion for collaborating with other artists. Recent concerts include a weekend of performances at the Galway Midwinter Festival where they collaborated with the ConTempo Quartet, and a weekend of concerts as part of the 2014 New Ross Piano Festival in September.

crOw

crOw is a unique Irish improvising duo comprising of Cathal Roche, saxophones and internationally renowned Irish composer Ian Wilson on live electronics and sound objects.

The duo draws upon a broad range of influences and sound sources to create a distinct improvisational voice which incorporates both music and noise/sound and which references variously jazz, world music, drone and death metal, ambient and techno, medieval, renaissance and contemporary classical music. crOw also seeks to respond to its performative environment by adjusting its sound parameters in real time in order to engage the acoustic and architectural properties of the auditorium itself in performance.

The duo’s highly successful ‘Sounding the City’ project for the 2015 Cork Midsummer Festival was centred on this idea and saw them perform in spaces as different as the National Sculpture Factory, the massive City Hall Atrium, the Sky Garden in Fitzgerald Park and the bijou GULPD café. crOw’s music crosses borders and boundaries but is at its heart expressive, colourful and textural. Like the eponymous bird’s cousin the magpie, crOw will, frankly, borrow anything it takes a fancy to but the results are, ultimately, inimitable.

Kirkos is a contemporary music ensemble made up of twelve of Ireland's finest musicians under 30, directed by Sebastian Adams and Robert Coleman. A key tenet of the Kirkos philosophy is that every element of a concert experience, from lighting to seating, should be regarded as being as important as the music being played. High concept programming and superb playing are the ensemble's dual aims, and Kirkos hope that their offbeat take on serious new music can be a game changer for the uninitiated.

In 2015, Kirkos focused their efforts on two major concept concerts. First came the mammoth Blackout series – three highly theatrical concerts in almost complete darkness, comprising three large scale chamber works and new solo works written in response, matched with experimental food. Beata Maria followed, taking the aesthetic of Blackout and paring it back for a set of newly written works by RIAM composers telling the story of The Nativity from Mary's perspective. Other key Kirkos projects have included 'Rite' (Stravinsky's Rite of Spring reimagined by fourteen Irish composers for string trio and live visuals in a latenight performance a century to the day after its fateful premiere) and CAGE100 (a chance programmed happening of John Cage's music).

Collaborations include relationships with Ensemble Music, Irish National Youth Ballet, London based composers collective Bastard Assignments, CMC, John Godfrey and three concerts with the Irish Composers Collective. Kirkos have given 25 concerts and nearly 90 world premieres in three years, including premieres from most of Ireland's leading composers including Gerald Barry, Raymond Deane, Kevin Volans, Andrew Hamilton, Linda Buckley, Kevin O'Connell, Ian Wilson, Jonathan Nangle, Garrett Sholdice.

Sylvia O’Brien

Equally at home in the classical and contemporary repertoire, Irish soprano Sylvia O’Brien has impressed audiences in opera, oratorio and chamber music. Her vocal and musical skills make her an important singer of contemporary repertoire, having performed works by Tristan Keuris, Gerald Barry, Louis Andriessen, Brian Irvine, Morton Feldman, Manos Tsangaris, Seóirse Bodley, Ian Wilson, Kevin O’Connell, Reymond Deane, Kaaija Saariaho, and Luigi Nono.

In September 2008 she premiered a new work by Joseph Phibbs Silence at the Song’s End for soprano and string quartet, at the Jubilee Hall Aldeburgh. She has performed and recorded the role of Gabriel in the Naxos recording of ‘The Bitter Tears of Petra von Kant’ by Gerald Barry. In 2013, she performed the Irish premiere of ‘Here (in circles)’ by Michel van der Aa with the Crash Ensemble conducted by Alan Pierson and in 2014 as part of the New Music Dublin Festival she sang Claude Vivier’s Lonely Child with the National Symphony Orchestra of Ireland conducted by Nicolas Cleobury.

Her passion and commitment to new music has led her to investigate the world of Irish contemporary song and subsequent to her recent residency at the Contemporary Music Centre, Sylvia spent her time exploring the library collection of contemporary Irish vocal music. She is currently touring with her recital ‘A Contemporary Voice’, an adventurous exploration of the rich tapas of contemporary Irish vocal repertoire. Sylvia is co-founder of EVLANA, an ensemble devoted to playing not only contemporary works but also work form the classical repertoire. She is also pursuing a Doctorate in Performance in contemporary Irish vocal music.
